The Jail Diversion team attends local Community Courts and Mental Health Court in hopes of identifying and assisting people struggling with legal charges due to their mental illness.

Case Management and Peer Support

Sometimes individuals with severe mental illness struggle with navigating the complex legal system. Jail Diversion Case Management or Peer Support can come alongside and help with identifying next steps, creating a plan, communicating with legal teams, the courts or DA's office, along with locating resources or needed supports such as housing, food stamps, treatment services, medications, and more. People are usually referred to case management or forensic peer support by their YCHHS treatment providers, the courts, or COS staff. These services are voluntary.

Parent-Child Interaction Therapy

Parent-Child Interaction Therapy (PCIT) is an intensive therapy aimed at improving behavior by promoting positive parent-child relationships. It uses in-the-moment, experience-based methods, and coaching. PCIT helps parents more effectively manage their child's behaviors, helps children be more cooperative, and improves the quality of parent-child relationships. This therapy is also effective in reducing the severity of trauma symptoms and helps children learn to regulate their emotions and behavior better.

During a PCIT coaching session, a therapist will watch you and your child interact through a one-mirror and/or live video feed. You will wear an earbud device allowing the therapist to provide in-the-moment coaching on skills that help you manage your child's behavior.

For more information, call (503) 434-7462.

Wraparound Care Coordination

When efforts with individual and family counseling haven't been enough to safely address more complex and severe problems, parents may request a more intensive care coordination called Wraparound Care Coordination.

Wraparound Care Coordination is a planning process that follows a series of steps to support youth and their families to accomplish their goals. A team is identified by the family for support and typically includes a Care Coordinator, individuals that the youth is close to (i.e., family members, friends, neighbors, church members, coaches etc.), and may include school staff, therapists, DHS case workers, P.O.s, or others. The team will develop a Care Coordination Plan and a Safety Crisis Plan. They will also look at additional supports and professional services as necessary.

These intensive services are available when a youth is involved in multiple systems, in addition to mental health services, such as Special Ed, Juvenile Probation, Child Welfare (ODHS), or Intellectual/Developmental Disabilities. Services provided could include active case management and skills training in the home or school. When a child's high-risk behavior cannot be stabilized, brief psychiatric day treatment, brief psychiatric residential or acute hospitalization may be considered. Each service is carefully considered by the team and offered only with the permission of the parents and when clinically necessary.

For more information, call (503) 434-7462.
